■ The Annual Law and Society Conference to be held at Macquarie University School of Law on 10–12 December 1993 has announced its theme: Shifting Boundaries: Law Democracy and the Liberal State in a Changing International Order. The theme encourages the exploration of issues of change: the desirable direction for change in forms of law; of democratic, political and social organisations and practices of government which are being sharply posed by a range of developments at the level of the nation-state; localised and regional identities and the international community as we approach the turn of the century.

Papers are called for.
