

A furry tongue

At a recent Crimes (Victims Assistance) Act Pre Hearing Conference callover Miss Jackson of Hunt and Hunt and Registrar Mossman launched into an interesting dialogue which stunned the waiting young lawyers at the rear of Local Court room six.

Registrar Mossman indicated to Miss Jackson that maybe an adjournment of 2 months was necessary for the provision of a specialist report. Miss Jackson replied that she would not need such a long period of time and that she was quite capable of having the report completed and served within 4 to 6 weeks.

Registrar Mossman, sounding very impressed with the shorter time frame responded "Well, Miss Jackson, you must have the velvet tongue". There were a few grins on the faces of onlookers in the rear of the court after hearing this comment.

Penguin Morri

He may be a keen party goer but he is a reluctant tux wearer.

This time there was no way out for Ian Morris at Hunt & Hunt's 70th Birthday celebrations at the swish Ritz Carlton in Double Bay in Sydney. No scruff from the Territory would do at a ball with all the trimmings and accompanied by a glamorously attired wife.

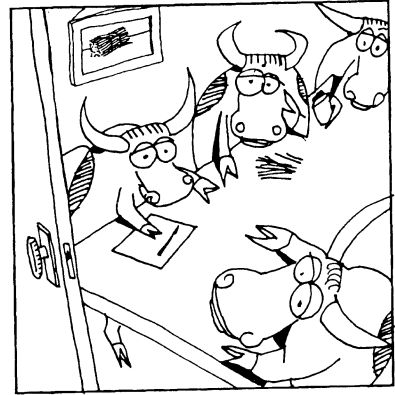

Things started well. We have it on good authority that he looked dapper in his penguin suit. By the end of the evening though Morri came into his own.

The Sydney search for the missing black bow tie is continuing.

Clay pigeons

De Silva Hebron's sporting challenge received a fairly quiet response from the Darwin profession. One local practitioner, however, has thrown his hat in the ring in what should prove a wonderful opportunity for our Balance photographer. The sport of choice for Brian Cassells is clay pigeon shooting.
